The means of transport are responsible for the displacement of people, animals, raw materials and goods, being of fundamental importance for the infrastructure and economy of a given location.

There are four modes of transport: land, water, air and pipeline.

Ground transportation is carried out on buses, cars, motorcycles and trucks that move on streets, roads and highways.

Water transport is characterized by displacement in lakes, rivers, seas and oceans. People and / or goods are transported in canoes, banks, ships, etc.

Air transport is considered the fastest and most sophisticated form of transport in the world. It is extremely important for those who want to travel in a short time, as the plane reaches extremely high speeds compared to other means of transport. In addition to airplanes, air transport can also be done by helicopters or balloons.
